PART II

NARRATIVE SUMMARY

During the month of November, the battery continued to improve its position and defensive counter-attack plans. Construction was begun on one new perimeter defensive bunker, while improvements and modifications were effected on existing defensive and ammunition bunkers. During this period, the battery strengthened its defensive position with a system utilizing the emplacement of Claymore mines about the perimeter during the hours of darkness. As part of the battery's overall security measures, the battery ran 7 patrols and put out 7 listening posts during November.

M-16A1 rifles were issued as T/O weapons during this period. An effective training and indoctrination program on this weapon was carried out in compliance with existing directives with one hundred per cent battery participation.
